

Information sheet for means-tested minimum income

The means-tested minimum income (BMS) refers to benefits that secure the livelihood and living needs of people who are in a situation of financial emergency and who can no longer afford to live by their own means (income and assets).

Eligibility requirements

- No income or income that is too low
- No assets
- Main residence in Lower Austria
- Entitled to permanent residency in Austria
- Willing to work, as long as there is no incapacity to work
- Willingness to integrate (e.g. attending German lessons and values and orientation courses)
- Presentation of the relevant documents (see Annex 1)

Application to

- District administration or magistrate
- Local authority of residence

Responsible for the decision

- District administration or magistrate

Benefits

- Money or payment in kind in the form of estimated minimum requirements.
- For persons who have been residing in Austria for less than five years within the last six years, minimum standards of integration apply.
- The sum of the minimum standards of all persons who live in the same household or shared accommodation is generally limited to a total of €1500.
- Payment of contributions for statutory health insurance
- Bonus for people re-entering the workforce

Payment / application for health insurance

- Payment to a national current account, without exception
- Benefits are transferred at the end of the month
- Only the applicant can be registered by the authorities for cover with the Social Insurances of Lower Austria directly
 - ➔ For the applicant's dependents, an application for coinsurance must be made to the Social Insurances of Lower Austria (contributions for this are still paid for within the framework of the means-tested minimum income).

Obligations

- Any change to conditions of eligibility is to be communicated to the district administration or magistrate within two weeks
 - For example:
 - Changes to income or assets
 - Changes to living or family arrangements
 - Changes to legal residency in Austria
 - Taking up gainful employment
 - A stay in a hospital or treatment institution
 - Other absences lasting for more than two weeks
- Assertion of claims by third parties (e.g. maintenance, sickness benefits)
- Commitment to work
- Attendance to German lessons in case of limited German knowledge or other methods to improve potential on the job market, the ability to work or social stabilisation (e.g. charitable community work).
- Attendance of at least an 8-hour values and orientation course for people who have resided in Austria for less than 5 years within the last 6 years.
- Acquisition of knowledge of the German language up to and including level A2 for persons who have been residing in Austria for less than 5 years within the last 6 years.
- Completion of an Integration Agreement for persons who have been residing in Austria for less than 5 years within the last 6 years.

Rejection / reduction / termination

For those refusing to work, for those not participating in integration methods (German lessons, values and orientation courses and community work), Public Employment Service courses or in cases of absence from such activities without a given explanation, the application to means-tested minimum income benefits will be rejected. Existing benefits will be reduced or cancelled.

Refunds, reimbursements and penalties

In the following cases, benefits will have to be paid back and a penalty can apply:

- Violation of the duty to inform the authorities of changes
- False information or non-disclosure of relevant information
- Subsequent acquisition of exploitable assets (e.g. inheritance)
- Compensation by a beneficiary

Reinsertion to job market bonus for taking up gainful employment

A reinsertion to the job market bonus can apply for those who have obtained means-tested minimum income benefits for at least 6 months without interruption and who have taken up employment (albeit marginally).

Application and deadlines:

The following two steps are necessary for application:

1. When taking up gainful employment, that is to say when the job starts, the relevant district administration or magistrate must be informed within two weeks.
2. At the latest, 4 weeks following taking up gainful employment, that is to say when the job starts, an application for a reinsertion into the job market bonus must be made either verbally or in writing to the relevant district administration or magistrate. It is also possible to make an application for the bonus when notifying that you are taking up gainful employment.

Amount:

The amount for the reinsertion to the job market bonus corresponds to a third of the net income (max.). If the net income and the bonus exceeds 140% of the minimum standard for single persons, the reinsertion to the job market bonus will be reduced accordingly.

The bonus is granted a maximum of 12 months. In the case of temporary employment, the bonus will be granted in accordance with the employment period.
